The Chinese became possessed of this territow about one hundred years ago, and the inhabitants broke out in rebellion against the Dragon Throne in 1826. They have always been unwilling subjects, and have had to be kept down by a large garrison. The upper classes are said to be opulest, and luxurious and extravagant in their habits. A large trade is carried on by the citzens with Bokhara, Yarkund, and with some border towns of Russia. It is probable that Russian influence and counsels prevail in Kishgar, and it is possible that they have fomented strife between China and its distant dependency. If it is true that the Kash gaians mean business, it is likely that the Clinese Government will have some trouble inextinguishing the revolt. The seat of war would be more than two thousand miles from Peting, and the people are known to be daring and bardy. They would have no difficulty ingetting arms and ammunition, and there is eason to believe that substantial assist and would be indirectly afforded if needed, in which case the struggle would doubtless bee rather protracted one.

We have received a Blue Book containing the Commercial Reports from Her Majesty's Consuls in China for 1873. Although there back on the original and strict rights of the is no very new information in these reports, some of Mr. Consul MEDHURST's remarks on appeal to the full Court. tride are worthy of attention. The year 1873 was in Shanghai marked by the signal duness of trade, and in hardly one single encountered severe weather on her passage, purpose to the defendant had been applied the question of whether the Code intended to respect was there cause for congratulation on the results as compared with previous years. Itis true that some slight consolation was tobe found in the fact that the diminution in the imports was likely to prove a remedy for the glutted state of the market, with all it ruinous consequences. The decrease in the imports chiefly belonged to Great Bri- it taking away themain rail from the afterpart of remained mapplied in the hands of the defenimports from Australia more than doubled those of the United States. They have profited greatly by foreign commerce, and might asily afford to give up a whare of the duties, which would also corrainly be increased by the abolition of the barrier dues and the consequent greater development of trale. ... The decline in the imports of manufactured cotton goods is especially noticeable. Grey Shirtings exhibit a decrease, as compared with 1872, of 200,000 pieces; and T-Cloths show a falling-off of 1,300,000 pieces. The decreased consumption of the latter is more especially perplexing to account for, since the trade in it had hitherto been remarkably flourishing. The Chinese affirm that the native cloth is more durable and economical than an equivalent quantity of fine 7lbs. T-Cloths, and there may of course be some truth in this statement. But there is very good reason for believing that one good cause for the reduction in the demand for British cotton goods is the prejudice which has grown up against them in consequence of the over-sizing and adulteration, which some of the manufacturers will, in defiance of every warning, persist in. So much mildewed cloth has been sent out that many of FLETCHER AND OTHERS W. THE HONGKO the Chinese, who at first were most favourably disposed towards the Mancheser fabrics, now view them all with equal distrust. In woollen goods there was a fair increase in consumption, but the imports were very large, draft was drawn by the Amoy branch of the which, by creating heavy stocks operated Hongkong Bank in favor of Dodd & Co., meragainst the importer. In the latter part the year Japan entered the Shanghai market as, a large purchaser of cotton goods, and relieved the merchants considerably. But,

taken altogether, the report is not a cheerful one, nor is the condition of trade at Shanghai now much more ressuring. And what was needed then to improve it is needed now.

New outlets are wanted for trade, together with the abolition of vexatious and embar-

A certain Marabout, named Amsdou Skan, had been for some time organizing revolt in the province of Cayor, and so formidable seemed the enemy that the French Government decided to act on the defensive. Colonel Vallière, therefore, governor of Senegal, sent five bundred men, under command of Colonel five days they encountered 13,000 strong-led by the Marabout. The sharp fire of the French; however, decided the combat in their favour at the end of an hour, when handreds of 'the insurgents were killed, among them their leader, a man of great prestige among his own people. The French losses were considerable, seventeen killed, fifteen severely wounded, twenty-one less so, and fifty-seven slightly. Among those killed were several officers; but this aummary success is said to have ensured peace and subordination in the colony for some time to come. —Pall Mall Gazotic.
